Excerpt from: THE FLYERS
From the top, the edge transitions into the bliss of last-second terror. At the bottom, endless ripples glisten with silent light from the swell of a billion sun drops. The swoop of the cliffs hide secret put-offs that run criss-cross, all the way to the Chic-Chocks.

Excerpt from: THE GIRL IN THE BOTTLE HOUSE
I complimented her on looking so beautiful. She smiled and turned her head slightly. She was constructed to replicate slim women during the days of freedom. That was before the crisis, before the shock, before the Obama bucks and Michele burgers.

Excerpt from: THE PEACE OF THE SIXTIES
After his last Trans-Canada tour the crowds became smaller. They assumed that he was sold out, well into the future. How he wrote and how he lived was kept well hidden. The pay cheques were always less than break-even.

Excerpt from: THE START OF OUR LIVES
At the bank, I made eye contact with Renate. She was always so smooth and sexy.
The next day I left, forever. There was no goodbye party. Only the sun thru the glass promised somethin'. A few of the kids talked about bein' doctors or teachers.
I knew that I could do better. I was goin' to be a go-getter.
