Hunting and Trapping on the Upper Magalloway River and Parmachenee Lake: First Winter in the Wilderness Fred C. Barker, John S. Danforth
The authors of this journal, Fred Barker & John Danforth, spent the winter of 1876 hunting and trapping on the Upper Magalloway River and Parmachenee Lake in the isolated wilderness of northwestern Maine.

From inside the book:
During the long winter evenings in our home camp the second winter we spent in the Northern wilderness, we busied ourselves copying a journal which we kept the winter before, but with no idea of ever putting it before the public, nor the one we kept the second winter. But when we saw so many writing about the woods and giving such flowery descriptions of the good times they had had, we thought we would have our book published, and give it to the people — a plain record of facts, without any change to make it into a romance.
