Johanna has it all figured out: she’s close to finishing college, has a pretty good job in her field, a supportive family, and a plan for making it all happen. Best of all, she’s rid of the latest in her series of bad boyfriends. Then one day, clear out of the blue, in walks a customer who changes everything. Tall, with rock-hard abs, salt-and-pepper hair, cute eyes, and a bo-flex body, oil tycoon Jeremiah, ‘The Jeremiah’ to Time Magazine and television shows, is immediately struck with Johanna, as she is to him.
But what about her life? Specifically, what about Caesar, the man who’s been there all along, who’s been her rock through hard times, the one she’s secretly loved for years?
Should she go for the impossible? Her sister advises her to be sensible. Her heart says something else. The only thing she knows for sure is she doesn’t want to look back and always wonder:
Shoulda, Woulda, Coulda.
