Excerpt from: A NEON DISPLAY OF CHEAP BIBLES
My reflection in the store windows told the story.
Life has been a detour of diversions and disappointments. But today, it felt like
I was just scuffing my cowboy boots on the pavement for the first time.

Excerpt from: ARCADE FIRE
The pain of white light was from an alien ship on a death mission. It cut into pale dresses and grey suits. There was no colour. The music tore off scabs and bled ear lobes. Then, without warning, seven or eight layers dropped to the stage floor.
The silence was an uproar.

Excerpt from: Collingwood Escarpment
The mornings are always different. Yesterday, a red sky hung over the escarpment.
The hills were set on fire by flowing gowns of yellow and crimson.
Today, the escarpment is dressed in a blue surge of ‘raincoat.’
The frayed belt was missing. From the top, an upturned collar cast dark shadows towards empty loops of fog and foam, ‘grain tower.’

Excerpt from: YOUR PICTURE WAS IN MIND
In the early days, during the middle of summer and late in winter, I had stumbled across those rails and slide along those stones, with a girl by my side. Your picture was in mind.
I don’t think that anyone else has ever came back to claim the love sickness.
I’ve done it a dozen times.

Excerpt from: I LIVE MORE THAN ONE LIFE
Out on the beach the gulls warm up near a sand bar. It appears that they are floating in shimmering water, but in the morning light it is obvious they are standing on crumbling castles. The sun creates a juxtaposition of viewpoints.
